Not illustrated. 1838 Excerpt: .Butera gave a splendid fete at his palace on the Marina. Pascal Bruno, the universal subject of conversation, was naturally spoken of, nor did the prince hear the stories which his guests were relating of him without thinking of their extraordinary meeting under the gigantic chestnut. The reader has already heard enough of the style of Prince Butera s living, and the unbound ed liberality of his establishment, to comprehend what a fete given by him would be, when he had resolved to make it transcend in splendour any thing of the sort which had preceded it. It would be ridiculous to attempt to give the details; truth to be told, they far exceeded the most sanguine expectations of his guests, and presented to their astonished sight, something like a bright vision, or rather, as if Palermo (where to this hour it is remembered and talked...
